Having seen accurate tidal prediction modelling for light to extreme cases I find it amazing that anyone considers Dublin to be a centre of anything. At best it is under threat and worst it's under water. Just one, once in 25yr storm will cause huge damage.

I admit it's human nature to bury our heads in the sand, but if the sand becomes covered in water then it's hard to deny.

How will Dublin survive? The bay is too wide for a barrier.
